Social scientists everywhere have an interest in understanding and explaining what happens in the world. In this anthology, Andrew P. Vayda and Bradley B. Walters aid social scientists with strategy and methods to answer their causal questions. The selected readings are not only by anthropologists, sociologists, economists, and human ecologists but also by philosophers, biologists, historians, and specialists in other fields. The essays will appeal to those doing applied research on practical problems as well as to those seeking to satisfy their intellectual curiosity about why things happen.

About the Editors

ANDREW P. VAYDA is professor emeritus of human ecology at Rutgers University.

BRADLEY B. WALTERS is professor of geography and environment at Mount Allison University in New Brunswick, Canada.